FEE Guide for SMEs on How to Reduce the Risk of Fraud

Europe's accountants help SME entrepreneurs to limit fraud risk

Brussels, 02 November 2005: FEE, the representative organisation of the accountancy profession in Europe, today launched its publication. How SMEs can reduce the risk of fraud. This practical guide is designed to assist in limiting the risk of fraud.

"Fraud is too often an unmanaged risk in Small and Medium-sized Enterprises (SMEs). Its impact is widely felt: on employees, on other stakeholders and ultimately, on business performance. Fraud produces serious consequences for businesses performance, often leading to business failure," warned FEE Vice-President and Chairman of the SME/SMP Working Party, Jose Maria Bove, speaking at the launch of the publication.

FEE Vice-President Bove added that:

"This publication will alert SMEs to the risk of fraud. It analyses its impact, provides practical suggestions to identify, detect and prevent fraud and recommends implementing internal control systems tailored to their specific needs. Cases studies are provided to illustrate the range and nature of fraudulent activity. Accountants can play a crucial role in advising entrepreneurs on how to reduce the risk of fraud since they can provide forensic or control advice, separately from statutory audits. They have the appropriate knowledge and expertise to help SMEs develop and implement systems and measures to detect, combat and in particular to prevent fraud."

The paper also highlights the key role audit and voluntary forensic audit can play in detecting fraud. It is the latest in a series of FEE guides addressed to small businesses.
